

NOTE: Colour and shade variation are inherent qualities in all fired ceramic products.

Borrowing from history, the concept for the Middle Earth Honeycomb tiles comes from the hexagonal unglazed tiles that were prevalent in the late Roman Empire. However in more recent times it is the French town of Salernes that is famous for the red hexagonal tiles that one sees in nearly every Provençal house. They are made from the rich red iron filled clay prevalent in the area where they are manufactured. Some times they are glazed to create an interesting pavement.

Like the Salernes tiles and following the same centuries old techniques, Middle Earth Honeycomb tiles are manufactured from a mixture of high iron content clays which after being shaped by wire cutting are fired at temperatures over 1100 C. With time the tiles will acquire a unique aged patina that will highlight the natural colours of the clays bringing a little bit of Provence to your home.
